15 August 2022

Nurse leader finalist in national Nursing Trailblazer Award

Professor Josephine Chow, Foundation Professor of the South Western Sydney Nursing and Midwifery Alliance, is one of the three finalists in the Federal Health Minister's Award for Nursing Trailblazers.

Professor Chow was nominated for her leadership in developing an innovative model of digital healthcare using artificial intelligence for vulnerable populations in south western Sydney.

Professor Chow holds a number of senior positions at South Western Sydney Local Health District, including Director Strategy and Partnerships and Deputy Director of Research.

The Federal Health Minister's Award for Nursing Trailblazers recognises nurse leaders and innovators who lead the way to transform health and aged care systems by impacting costs, improving quality of care and enhancing consumer satisfaction.

The award acknowledges nurse-led innovations and models of care which significantly improve health outcomes for the Australian community through evidence-based processes.

The Nursing Trailblazers award winner will be announced at the National Nursing Forum in Darwin from 17 to 19 August 2022.

More information on the 2022 Trailblazer in Nursing Awards is available here.