Introduction

The Drug Health Services Operational Plan 2023-2025 identifies the actions that Drug Health Services will take over the next two years in support of South Western Sydney Local Health District's Strategic Plan 2022-2027 strategic directions.

Drug Health Services aims to improve the health of the community, reduce drug and alcohol related harm for people who use substances, and to increase access to treatment for those requiring specialist drug and alcohol services. Drug Health delivers a range of drug and alcohol prevention, treatment and intervention services across inpatient, outpatient, outreach and integrated healthcare settings.

Substance use poses significant challenges to individuals, families and communities. The harms and adverse health impacts associated with problematic substance use place burdens on quality of life, relationships and community function. They are also commonly associated with major medical, psychological and social issues and premature death.

Substance use occurs in all communities however those experiencing greater poverty, isolation, marginalisation and disadvantage experience a disproportionate level of harm. Stigma, criminalisation and discrimination experienced by people who use substances create barriers to service access and uptake and contribute to poor health outcomes.

People experiencing substance dependence and related health issues are seen across the health system. More than a third of all hospital presentations are estimated to be related to substance use, however, the majority are not identified. Only a quarter of those that require intensive intervention are seen by drug and alcohol clinicians. Those experiencing high acuity substance related withdrawal, especially where it is not the presenting problem or is not identified, pose additional challenges to hospital staff. People may also require multiple and ongoing engagement and many experience other health issues including mental health, cognitive impairment, hepatitis C and physical health problems.

Health services can provide a point for the early identification, management and coordination of responses and have a history of delivering targeted and innovative services to people with complex health and social problems. Drug and alcohol services support other health services in managing changes to service demand and provide significant cost savings to hospitals. Early identification, engagement, treatment and intervention by hospital-based drug and alcohol teams provide costs savings from reduced admissions, incidents, post-operative morbidity and re-presentations. Prevention and harm minimisation services reduce transmission risks and related harms.

A coordinated response across health, justice, social and community sectors is required to establish an integrated network of drug and alcohol services. The engagement and collaboration with consumers, communities, services and stakeholders are crucial to the development of an integrated network of drug and alcohol services. The inclusion of people with lived experience of drug and alcohol strengthens service responses.

Research and evaluation, organisational structures, specialist staff, consumer systems and peer worker capacity, new service models and targeted programs are required to deliver services for the future. Partnerships with primary health, Aboriginal and non-government services, supported by sustained investment in population level community education including awareness raising campaigns, are critical to the response.
